At the Union league's celebration of on the duty of wealthy men to mee their just tax obligations. The subject is one of great interest and importance who put its welfare above purely sel

This is bad enough in itself. but what makes it worse is the fact that much of this property remains untaxed to become a dictator in state and local because its owners commit perjury. It politics: and another Democratic paper in the same state says: "Mr. Bryan's some men who possess great wealth and are usually considered upright, seem to think little of swearing falsely when riends as the law of the silver party," it comes to a matter of taxation. The same men would resent with the utmost indignation any reflection upon their honor, and in other matters of far greater weight to them, they would not much as think of swearing to a lie. But when it comes to a matter of tax return, they seem to think it legitimate to deceive and thereby escape the pay ment of taxes on as large an amount o property as possible.

Mr. Harrison was right in saying that this is a menace to the institutions of the country. It is no wonder that there are ugly threats of revolution, and that men of small means whose property does not escape, become indignant whe they see the immunity which men far more able to pay enjoy.

Those who avoid just taxation in whole or in part fail to perform their whole duty to the state. DOGS FOR ALASKA.

SEVENTY BROUGHT FROM BELGIUM TO DRAW SLEDGES.

Mr. Daving Will Take His Pack of Caning of Mixed Breed to the Klondike-They Are Expected to Prove More Serviceable Than Eskimo Dogs.

The steamship British King, which arrived at New York recently, found Antwerp. The wild orchestra of the elements was punctuated by the yelping New Mexico will derive great benefit and howling of 70 dogs in little stalls 'tween decks. Their bark was on the sea almost from the moment they left

G. R. Davies, a tall Englishman of cosmopolitan habits, owns the dogs. He has been everywhere except the Klonkilled. Mr. Davies is somewhat of a speculator. He observed, while in Belgium, that much of the drawing of light vehicles was done by dogs of the mixed breeds that he has brought to America. Mr. Davies says that most of the dogs can easily draw a cart which. with its contents, weighs about half a the neighborhood of Antwerp, raise the dogs just as a breeder of draft horses in Normandy raises horses. The dogs sell in Belgium for $20 each. Mr. Davies says that, with the cost of transportation, they will be worth gion. Each of the dogs was chained in its little stall very much like a pony. Dogs of mixed breed and of no breed at all do not agree when they are permitted to run around as they please. Mr. dogs loose on the ship there would have not a bit savage toward man, but they are not fond of each other.

The keepers of the pack are Julius Berhelst, a Belgian, and Henry Love, a cowboy of the southwest. The dogs have not quite caught on to orders in the American language, and that is the reason the Belgian was brought over with them. They understand Flemish, or the kind of Flemish that the farmers around Antwerp speak, and Berhelst, who knows a little English, hopes to have them respond to orders in his version of that language after a little train ing and practice.

Three of the wildest of the pack slip ped their collars on a stormy day in midocean and began prancing about the ship. The sailors and the returning cattlemen made a vain effort to catch the dogs. They would not be caught. Then Love, the cowboy, got after them with his lariat. The rope whizzed through the air and fell over the ample neck of a dog. minutes in the unconditional surrender

Mr. Davies will take the dogs from Montreal to Ottawa, where he will meet Warburton Pike the author of "Lone Lands of the North," who knows much more about the Klondike than Mr. Davies. "The route we will take after leaving Ottawa," Mr. Davies said, "will depend on the advice of Mr. Pike. We will utilize half breeds and Indians of the Canadian northwest as guides. We intend to carry provisions to the Klon-dike on large sleds. Each sled will be drawn by four dogs, two abreast. We believe that the dogs will be better for the service than the Eskimo dogs."-New York Sun.

him the job of getting the forms ready for the press. In the hurry of emptying the type on the Apposing stone two articles were mixed, and there appeared in the columns of the paper next morning the following story: IN THE GOLDEN DAYS OF YOUTH.

"Die!" exclaimed the villain. Aiming his revolver straight at the breast of Montmorency Murgatroyd, he pulled the trigger.

The deadly weapon failed to explode. With a howl of baffled rage the dastardly coward flung overboard the useless revolver, and before any one could stop him he ran to the side of the steam er, shook his fist in impotent wrath at Murgatroyd, leaped lightly over the rail and fell with a "chug" in the dark waters far below.

Not until then did the hero of our tale turn to the half fainting maiden by his side. "Darling," he whispered reassuring-ly, "he will never trouble us again." "Who is he, Monty?" said the trembling girl. His brow darkened.

"Ask me rather 'who was he?" " be replied moodily. "He has gone to his death. Foiled in his villainy, he has sought a watery grave." Montmorency Murgatroyd folded his arms and looked sternly at the setting In silence they continued to pace up and down the promenade deck of the palatial steamer.

Presently he spoke again "It is too long a story to relate in full." he said, "but I can give you its outlines. Listen.

Pointing at the phosphorescent glow already beginning to be visible upon the darkening waters, he continued: "In all cases of liver complaint, lum-
